Main Ideas and Objectives

Emergency Medical Services (EMS) is a system that provides urgent medical care and transportation to individuals experiencing serious illness or injury. EMS is often the first point of contact in a medical emergency and includes highly trained pre-hospital clinicians, such as paramedics and emergency medical technicians (EMTs)

The four levels of EMS licensure are:

Emergency Medical Responder (EMR): EMRs provide basic, immediate care and life-saving interventions while waiting for higher-level EMS personnel to arrive. They perform tasks like CPR, controlling bleeding, and basic airway management.

Emergency Medical Technician (EMT): EMTs offer more advanced care than EMRs, including patient assessment, basic life support, and transportation. They can manage airways, administer some medications, and perform basic emergency procedures.

Advanced Emergency Medical Technician (AEMT): AEMTs provide all the care that EMTs do, plus advanced life support. They can administer intravenous fluids, use advanced airway devices, and give a broader range of medications.

Paramedic: Paramedics are the highest level of EMS providers. They perform advanced medical procedures, including intubation, administering a wide range of medications, and using complex equipment. They provide critical care in emergency situations.

Random Fact

The Star of Life is a symbol used to identify emergency medical services (EMS).

Each of the six points on the star represents a critical function of EMS:

Detection--Reporting--Response--On-Scene Care--Care in Transit--Transfer to Definitive Care
