Sewing Success Directions In Development:

Sewing Success? Gladys Lopez-Acevedo, Raymond Robertson, 2012-03-14 The end of the MFA was followed by rising apparel exports falling prices and a reallocation of production and employment between countries There were also significant changes within countries The first main finding of this report is that export and employment patterns after the MFA ATC did not necessarily match predictions While many predicted that production would shift to low wage countries this book shows that only 13 percent of variation in export changes post MFA can be explained by the differences in wage levels Second changes in exports are usually but not always good indicators of what happens to wages and employment within countries This is especially important for policy because it shows that simply using exports as a metric of success in terms of helping the poor is not sufficient Third the Book identifies the specific ways that changes in the global apparel market affected earnings The Book shows that wage premiums change in predictable ways rising in most cases in countries that were proactive in adapting to the MFA phase out and expanded their market shares and falling in countries that failed to respond in a timely fashion to the changing environment The Book shows that promoting upgrading defined as shifting to higher value goods shifting up the value chain or modernizing production techniques seems to be necessary for sustainable competitiveness in the apparel sector but does not necessarily help the poor Policies that support upgrading need to be complemented with targeted workforce development to make sure that the most vulnerable workers are not left behind Having a vision for the evolution of the apparel sector that incorporates developing worker skills seems crucial Otherwise less skilled workers could miss out on opportunities to gain valuable work experience in manufacturing Exports to Improve Labor Markets in the Middle East and North Africa Gladys Lopez-Acevedo, Raymond Robertson, 2023-08-07 In the Middle East and North Africa MENA trade liberalization measures have coincided with stable economic growth and GDP per capita growth has surpassed that of other developing regions However MENA's labor market outcomes such as average wage levels informality rate and female labor force participation continue to underperform Why has rising trade failed to produce better labor market outcomes in low and middle income countries in the region Exports to Improve Labor Markets in the Middle East and North Africa focuses on the impact of trade policy on trade flows and their relationship with local labor market outcomes in three low and middle income countries the Arab Republic of Egypt Morocco and Tunisia Given their idiosyncratic labor markets export diversification and trade policy history these three countries offer important lessons for economic development in the region Policy makers and stakeholders can use these findings to design policies to improve the chances that higher trade flows will deliver better labor market outcomes and ensure that the benefits are more equally shared This report led by Gladys Lopez Acevedo and Raymond Robertson pushes forward the frontier of knowledge about the relationship between trade and the labor market in MENA Although focusing on three countries the Arab Republic of Egypt Morocco and Tunisia it gives us broader lessons on how to solve the apparent puzzle of greater exposure to trade not being followed by greater labor market outcomes in the region It points out among other factors how market segmentation by gender shapes the effects of trade shocks like higher exports Policy makers in the region will definitely benefit from the evidence and analysis conveyed by the report on how to turn trade integration into a lever for shared prosperity Otaviano Canuto Senior Fellow at the Policy Center for the New South and former Vice President of the World Bank This timely report attempts to understand why trade expansion did not produce the desired improvements in labor market outcomes in three non oil exporting countries in MENA The main reason for the weak link between trade expansion and widely shared labor market improvements appears to be the segmented nature of labor markets in the three countries by gender as well as by formality status In Morocco and Tunisia the highly segmented labor markets along gender lines in combination with the concentration of trade in male dominated capital intensive sectors led to few employment benefits accruing to women In Egypt the limited impact of trade on formal employment is attributable to the small size of the nation s export sector and its lack of integration with the rest of the economy These findings are critical to understanding how barriers to widely shared prosperity can be tackled in the region Ragui Assaad Professor Humphrey School of Public Affairs University of Minnesota

From Jobs to Careers Stacey Frederick, Gladys Lopez-Acevedo, Raymond Robertson, Mexico Vergara Bahena, 2021-12-17 An oft cited strategy to advance economic development is to further integrate developing countries into global trade particularly through global value chains bolstered by the expansion of female intensive industries to bring more women into the formal labor force As a result a frequent debate centers on whether the apparel industry the most female intensive and globally engaged manufacturing industry can be a key player in this strategy In recent decades the apparel industry has shifted production to low wage developing countries increasing the demand for women closing male female wage gaps and bringing women into the formal labor force from agriculture and informal work But is an apparel led export strategy sufficient to induce a broader transition from jobs women do to survive to careers promising stable employment and a sense of identity From Jobs to Careers answers this question by focusing on seven countries where apparel plays a vital role in their export baskets Bangladesh Cambodia the Arab Republic of Egypt Pakistan Sri Lanka Turkey and Vietnam It finds that the apparel industry indeed can serve as a launching pad to bring more women into the labor market For this approach to work however complementary policies must tackle the barriers that hinder women s pursuit of long term workforce participation and better paid occupations Key policy recommendations include increasing the participation of female production workers in export oriented apparel manufacturing and associated industries upgrading within manufacturing related industries boosting access to education and breaking glass ceilings The report also seeks to shift the paradigm of how we think of women in the labor force by stressing the importance of their transition from jobs to careers the so called quiet revolution

SDG 12 and Global Fashion Textiles Production Abu Sadat Muhammad Sayem, Parik Goswami, 2025-08-23 This book is a comprehensive exploration of the intersection between the fashion textiles industry and United Nations Sustainable Development Goal 12 responsible consumption and production. SDG 12 It delves into the intricate web of environmental, social, and economic challenges posed by the fashion textile sector and provides innovative solutions to align with the principles of SDG 12. In Chapter 1, the interconnectedness of fashion and various UN SDGs is highlighted with a specific focus on SDG 12's call for responsible consumption and production. The startling statistics such as fashion's contribution to global wastewater, carbon emissions, pesticide use, and hazardous working conditions underscore the urgency for change. Chapter 2 introduces a ground-breaking framework: Identify, Act, Evaluate, I, A, E, crafted to usher in sustainable practices within fashion and textile production. Technological advancements in fibre production, recycling, weaving, and knitting techniques are explored in Chapters 3 through 6, offering a roadmap for transforming traditional pollution-intensive processes. Chapter 7 delves into revolutionary dyeing, printing, and coating methods, including water-free dyeing and plasma technology. The book further delves into the broader sustainability landscape of apparel manufacturing and the fashion industry in Chapters 8 through 10, encompassing environmental, social, and economic dimensions. Concluding with an insightful investigation into climate change's aftermath on the fashion manufacturing sector, the book underscores the imperative of resilience in tandem with sustainability. This book paves the way for an eco-conscious revolution within the textile industry, urging stakeholders to embark on a journey towards a more responsible and resilient future.
