Palliative Care and Rehabilitation of Cancer Patients Charles F. von Gunten, 2012-12-06 Introduction The prevailing model of medical care for patients with cancer emphasizes the curative efforts of medical technology toward the eradication of the disease Yet the suffering of the patient as a result of both the disease and our efforts to treat it is often overlooked If we are to improve the survival of patients with cancer it will be through intensive research into the molecular underpinnings of the disease and clinical trials of new therapies However it is essential to recognize and address the suffering of cancer patients as they are being treated It is the purpose of this book to illuminate and advance the prevention and treatment of suffering as part of the continuum of care for patients with cancer Fundamental concepts Since the time of Hippocrates in the fifth century B c there have been two overall goals for the physician Cure of disease Relief of suffering From our vantage point in the late twentieth century looking back at previous centuries it is easy to observe that aside from surgery much of the medical care administered to patients with cancer was aimed at relieving the suffering associated with illness It wasn't until the concept of disease as opposed to illness was elucidated and the scientific method was applied to understanding and eradicating cancer that significant strides were made to improve the physician's ability to cure cancer
