

General Introduction

- zebras are part of the same family as horses (equus)
- there are 3 main types: plains zebra, Grevy's zebra and mountain zebra
- there are about 750000 plains zebras but the other two are endangered
- they live in southern and eastern Africa, mainly on the grasslands

How they live

- social animals
- live in family groups
- groups band together to form vast herds of thousands
- they are herbivores: eat mainly grass, also eat shrubs, herbs, twigs leaves and bark
- they live about 25 years
- the babies (foals) drink milk from the mother for a long time
- can stand up about 20 minutes after they are born
- they graze during the day
- communicate with facial expressions, snorting, braying, baring teeth, using ears
- sleep standing up
- the ears of a zebra show its mood: they can turn them in almost any direction pulled back when angry, upright when calm

Description

- easily recognised by their black and white stripes
- the patterns of stripes are unique to each zebra
- a course short mane which stands upright
- shoulder height between 1.1m to 1.5m
- tail about half a metre long
- eyes on the side of head – giving a good field of vision
- large ears
- hooves

Fascinating facts

- thought that stripes may help with camouflage although nobody is sure why they have them
- unlike other members of the horse family they have never been domesticated
- constantly aware of natural enemies such as lions, and hyenas
- best form of defence is to run away quickly: they can run up to 65 km per hour (about 35 to 40 mph) and zig-zag to avoid capture
- if a zebra is attacked other family members may try to protect it
- they also have a powerful kick
- they groom each other
- they move across the plains in search of green pastures, travelling at the speed of the slowest, but often more than 40 km a day
- pronounced with a short z sound but used to be pronounced with a long sound as in 'zeebra', which is how it is pronounced in the USA

Computational Linguistics and Talking Robots Roland Hausser, 2011-08-19 The practical task of building a talking robot requires a theory of how natural language communication works Conversely the best way to computationally verify a theory of natural language communication is to demonstrate its functioning concretely in the form of a talking robot the epitome of human machine communication To build an actual robot requires hardware that provides appropriate recognition and action interfaces and because such hardware is hard to develop the approach in this book is theoretical the author presents an artificial cognitive agent with language as a software system called database semantics DBS Because a theoretical approach does not have to deal with the technical difficulties of hardware engineering there is no reason to simplify the system instead the software components of DBS aim at completeness of function and of data coverage in word form recognition syntactic semantic interpretation and inferencing leaving the procedural implementation of elementary concepts for later In this book the author first examines the universals of natural language and explains the Database Semantics approach Then in Part I he examines the following natural language communication issues using external surfaces the cycle of natural language communication memory structure autonomous control and learning In Part II he analyzes the coding of content according to the aspects semantic relations of structure simultaneous amalgamation of content graph theoretical considerations computing perspective in dialogue and computing perspective in text The book ends with a concluding chapter a bibliography and an index The book will be of value to researchers graduate students and engineers in the areas of artificial intelligence and robotics in particular those who deal with natural language processing

Human Language Peter Hagoort, 2019-10-29 A unique overview of the human language faculty at all levels of organization Language is not only one of the most complex cognitive functions that we command it is also the aspect of the mind that makes us uniquely human Research suggests that the human brain exhibits a language readiness not found in the brains of other species This volume brings together contributions from a range of fields to examine humans language capacity from multiple perspectives analyzing it at genetic neurobiological psychological and linguistic levels In recent decades advances in computational modeling neuroimaging and genetic sequencing have made possible new approaches to the study of language and the contributors draw on these developments The book examines cognitive architectures investigating the functional organization of the major language skills learning and development trajectories summarizing the current understanding of the steps and neurocognitive mechanisms in language processing evolutionary and other preconditions for communication by means of natural language computational tools for modeling language cognitive neuroscientific methods that allow observations of the human brain in action including fMRI EEG MEG and others the neural infrastructure of language capacity the genome s role in building and maintaining the language ready brain and insights from studying such language relevant behaviors in nonhuman animals as birdsong and primate vocalization Section editors Christian F Beckmann Carel ten Cate Simon E Fisher Peter Hagoort Evan Kidd Stephen C Levinson James M McQueen Antje S Meyer David Poeppel Caroline F Rowland Constance Scharff Ivan Toni Willem Zuidema
