PREVENTING & MANAGING DISABLING INJURY AT WORK

PREVENTING & MANAGING DISABLING INJURY AT WORK

Edited by Terrence Sullivan and John Frank

Work-related disability is an increasingly important issue in businesses and organizations, in terms of cost and competitiveness as well as being an obvious social and ethical issue. Moreover, changes in the nature of disability arising from developments in the nature of work warrant a new approach to this relatively important but understudied topic.

Work-related disability has been playing an ever-increasing role in a changing labour market, in driving new systems and subsequent primary prevention efforts, in engaging in the key stakeholders in effective prevention programmes and joint injury reduction management efforts, and in expressing the relative contributions of company-level interventions and systemic, societal, and regulatory mechanisms. These issues are examined and drawn together to form a unique, comprehensive, state-of-the-art research work reviewing what works best in the prevention of workplace disability. It serves as a resource for providing evidence on the evidence and helps focus the research community on what constitutes effective early and chronic management interventions in the workplace, psychological and psychosocial and the essential linkages in the workplace, the domain, the research and the issues in the research practice, and in the prevention of subsequent disability events at work.

This volume brings together a group of active researchers in North America and Australia who are working in the field of work-related disability issues, in design, prevention, and management programs, as well as through research in research in Canada and Europe, in Health Research Council of Canada, in Canada, in work disability with case studies and practical examples, which focus on the work factors in the workplace, the domain, the research and the issues in the research practice, and in the prevention of subsequent disability events at work.

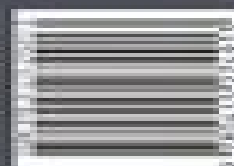

Terrence Sullivan is Vice President and Head of the Division of Preventative Oncology at Cancer Care Toronto, Canada.
John Frank is Senior Scientist in the Institute for Work and Health at the University of Toronto, Canada.
