

Natural Resources

If you look around your neighborhood or community, you will see many things being used by people. There is oil in automobiles, soil and water used by gardeners, wood used by home builders, concrete steps and plants being eaten by animals. All of these things have their origins in nature.

Everything in nature that humans use are natural resources. They are the things that human beings use for survival. These things also include land, forests, animals, rocks, fossil fuels, and minerals inside the Earth. Human beings did not create natural resources. They have always been a part of the Earth before humans appeared. Natural resources, though, are used quite often by humans.

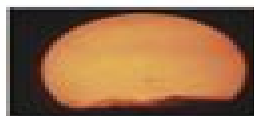

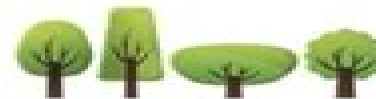

Most of the natural resources are connected to each other in some way. For example, water is a natural resource, and if there was a limited supply, then other resources such as animals and plants would be affected.

Natural resources are consumed directly or indirectly. For example, when animals eat plants they are consuming a natural resource directly. However, the trees of a rain forest indirectly act as climate control, flood control, and storm protection. The trees of a forest can also be used as raw materials for making houses, furniture, paper, or other items.

There are several categories or types of natural resources and can be a solid, liquid or a gas.

ORGANIC: Resources that come from living things. Examples include trees, animals, plants, algae, fish, single-celled organisms, and other living things.

INORGANIC: Resources that come from non-living things. Examples include water, wind, Sun, minerals, and many others.
