

THE MUSCLES

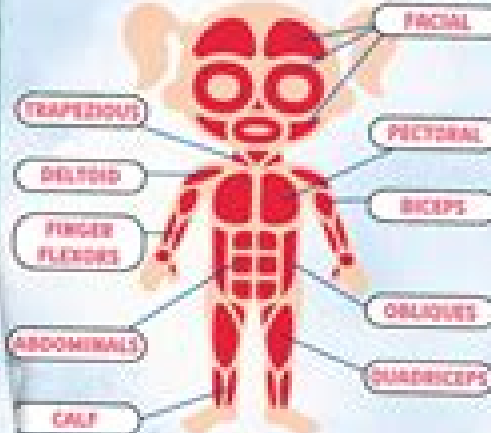

Muscles are the special tissues that let you move your body. They work by getting shorter and longer. When you lift your arm, your muscles get shorter and pull your arm up. When you relax, your muscles get longer and your arm goes down.

MUSCLES WORK IN PAIRS

Your muscles usually work in pairs. When you lift your arm, your biceps get shorter and pull your arm up. When you relax, your triceps get longer and push your arm down. This is how muscles work in pairs.

MUSCLES AND THE EYES

Your eyes are like cameras that let you see the world around you. They have muscles that help them move in different directions. These muscles are called extraocular muscles.

There are six muscles attached to each eye that move the eyeball. Three of them are called extraocular muscles. They help you look up, down, left, and right.

Eye muscles work in pairs. When you look up, your eye muscles get shorter and pull your eye up. When you look down, your eye muscles get longer and push your eye down.

The muscles around your eyes let you move your eyes in different directions. They help you look up, down, left, and right.

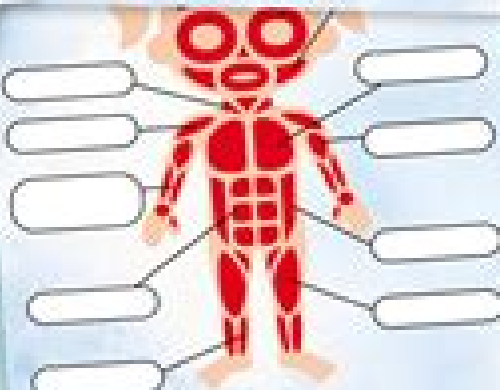

When you look up, your eye muscles get shorter and pull your eye up. When you look down, your eye muscles get longer and push your eye down. This is how muscles work in pairs.

So, whether you're looking up at a bird or down at a book, your eye muscles are working hard to help you see the world around you.

MUSCLE RELAXATION

After the muscles are done, they relax. This is how they get ready to work again. When you relax, your muscles get longer and your arm goes down.

Remember that you can't lift an object if your muscles are relaxed. They need to be contracted to move things. So, when you lift something, your muscles get shorter and pull the object up.
