

A detailed, grayscale map of Japan serves as the background for the entire slide. The map shows the four main islands: Hokkaido, Honshu, Shikoku, and Kyushu, along with numerous smaller islands. A dense network of thin lines represents the country's extensive railway system, connecting major cities and regions. Darker, shaded areas indicate urban centers and industrial zones, particularly concentrated in the Kanto plain, the Osaka region, and along the coast. The map provides a geographical context for the book's title, which focuses on the sources of Japanese industrialization.

Labour-Intensive Industrialization in Global History Gareth Austin, Kaoru Sugihara, 2013-09-13 The prevailing view of industrialization has focussed on technology capital entrepreneurship and the institutions that enabled them to be deployed Labour was often equated with other factors of production and assigned a relatively passive role Yet it was labour absorption and the improvement of the quality of labour over the course of several centuries that underscored the timing pace and quality of global industrialization While science and technology developed in the West and whereas the use of fossil fuels especially coal and oil were vital to this process the more recent history has been underpinned by the development of comparatively resource and energy saving technology without which the diffusion of industrialization would not have been possible The labour intensive resource saving path which emerged in East Asia under the influence of Western technology and institutions and is diffusing across the world suggests the most realistic route humans could take for a further diffusion of industrialization which might respond to the rising expectations of living standards without catastrophic environmental degradation
