

Economic professors continuing stock market battles

By James O'Connell
For the Bulletin
The debate between two professors at Brown University is the latest in a series of arguments about the stock market. The debate, which began in the pages of the Journal of Applied Corporate Finance, has now moved to the pages of the Journal of Applied Corporate Finance. The debate is about the stock market's role in the economy. One professor, John C. Coates, Jr., of Brown University, argues that the stock market is a "market for capital" and that it is essential for the economy. The other professor, John C. Coates, Jr., of Brown University, argues that the stock market is a "market for capital" and that it is essential for the economy.
