

Criminal Thinking Errors

Cutoff: with practice, the lifestyle criminal eliminates normal feelings, which deter criminal action through a simple phrase ("fuck-it", "just chill"), image, or musical theme. In some cases the offender will use drugs or alcohol to cut off fear, anxiety, guilt, or other common deterrents to criminal activity.

Cognitive Indolence (Mental Laziness): as lazy in thought as in behavior, lifestyle criminals take short-cuts which inevitably lead to failure, low self-evaluation, and poor critical reasoning skills.

Power Orientation: choosing power and external control over self-discipline and internal control, lifestyle criminals attempt to exert power and control over others. Consequently, they feel weak and helpless (zero state) when not in control of a situation. They attempt to alleviate this feeling by manipulating, intimidating, or physically assaulting others (power thrust).

Discontinuity: lifestyle criminals have difficulty maintaining focus over time because of being easily influenced by events and situations occurring around them. As a result, they have difficulty following through on initially good intentions.

Mollification: lifestyle criminals seek to play down the seriousness of past criminal conduct and current interpersonal conflicts by blaming problems on external circumstances, making excuses for their behavior, pointing out unfairness in the world, or de-valuing their victims.

Entitlement: the lifestyle criminal believes that he is entitled to violate the laws of society and the rights of others by way of an expressed attitude of ownership ("it's mine"), privilege ("I'm above the law"), or by labeling wants as needs ("I needed a new car, expensive clothing, a trip to Las Vegas, etc.").

Sentimentality: like most people, the lifestyle criminal has an interest in being viewed as a "nice guy". However, this creates a serious dilemma, given the level of interpersonally intrusive activity they have engaged in. Consequently, they may perform various "good deeds" with the intent of cultivating a "Heck-of-a-guy" or "Robin Hood" image.

Super-Optimism: experience has taught lifestyle criminals that they get away with most of their crimes. This leads to a growing sense of overconfidence in which they believe they are invulnerable, indomitable, and unbeatable. Ironically, this belief leads to their eventual downfall.

Criminal Thinking Patterns

Irresponsibility: Failing to meet personal obligations to family, friends, and employers.

Self-Indulgence: Thinking of oneself without regard for negative long-term consequences.

Interpersonal Intrusiveness: Intruding on and violating others rights.

Social Rule Breaking: Transgressing the rules of the home, neighborhood, school, and society.

3 C's: Conditions = Social Environment; Choice = Ego Battle; Cognitions = Thought Processes

Manipulation: Influence/control over personal gain or advantage.

Grandiosity: Criminal pride. Being proud of the fruits of your crime. Exaggerating the extent of your criminality (e.g., "I sold hundreds of keys, had money, cars, jewelry, women"). In addition to these thinking patterns, specific criminal acts are affected by motives such as fear, anger/rebellion, power/control, excitement/pleasure and greed/laziness. These motivations sometimes combine with criminal thinking patterns to produce a variety of maladaptive behaviors.
