Nevo Q50 User Manual:

The Qur'ān as a Classic Mourad Takawi, 2025-12-31 This volume is a study in the history of the reception of the Qur'n in the early Islamic centuries. It aims at taking scholarship beyond attempts at situating early qur'nic exegesis within the confines of magisterial classical Tafs'r and offers a systematic investigation of the early interpretations of select qur'nic passages against the backdrop of the interreligious milieu of the growing Islamic Empire. By incorporating writings on the Qur'n across different genres not only by Muslim authors but also by Arabophone Christian writers, this study maps the exegetical trajectories of key qur'nic passages in the early Islamic period, thereby providing historical context for classical Tafs'r works. Far from an imagined splendid isolation marred by occasional interreligious polemics, the picture we get is an exegetical feedback loop with Christians relying on as well as reacting to Muslim data and vice versa. This study further argues that incorporating Arabic Christian readings of the Qur'n inevitably enriches our understanding of the reception of the sacred text and indeed helps us better capture the dynamism characteristic of the interreligious context of Qur'n interpretation in the early Islamic centuries. The Education Index, 1980 Humanities Index, 1978
