

Which of the following was the fundamental difference between classical and Keynesian macroeconomics?

- ☐ Differences in their assumptions about whether people rationally incorporate information about the future into today's decisions
- ☒ The degree to which we should be willing to trade higher inflation in the future for lower unemployment today
- ☐ The assumed slope of the aggregate demand curve
- ☐ The assumed slope of the short-run aggregate supply curve

This resulted in different ideas about

- ☒ The existence of "the long run."
- ☐ The existence of business cycles.
- ☐ The effect of a change in aggregate demand on short-run GDP.
- ☐ Whether an increase in the money supply would cause inflation.
