

Career Plan

Looking at how quickly time is flying, it is just a matter of time before I am out of college and graduate with a degree in Business. However, graduation does not guarantee me a career in the competitive job market if I fail to take advantage of my strengths and recognize areas that I should take advantage of and enhance my capacity to succeed in my career. Following my college graduation, I will get directly into employment and continue with my education on a part-time basis with the job opportunity being a chance to start gaining experience in the job market. That said, I want to become a career human resources manager since I realize the importance of using an organization's human resource capital efficiently in order to enhance productivity in an organization.

Strengths and Weaknesses

Concerning my strengths, I have strong interpersonal skills. In this case, I am able to connect and relate with people since I am a keen listener and engage people because I communicate well with them and make them express themselves better by making them confident when we are communicating. This will help me establish good relationships with my colleagues and help me achieve my career goals since I will have the capacity of completing my roles and responsibilities within an organization. Other than strong interpersonal skills, I am a well-organized individual and an orderly person with regard to my roles as a student and my personal life. Good organization skills are essential for effective management and in particular to an individual aspiring to build a career in human resource management.
