Wilson,Keith Malcolm Wilson,1996 When studying the origins of the First World War scholars have relied heavily on the series of key diplomatic documents published by the governments of both the defeated and the victorious powers in the 1920s and 1930s However this volume shows that these publications rather than dealing objectively with the past were used by the different governments to project an interpretation of the origins of the Great War that was more palatable for them and their country than the truth might have been In revealing the policies that influenced the publication of the documents the relationships between the commissioning governments their officials and the historians involved this collection serves as a warning that even seemingly objective sources have to be used with caution in historical research Classified Index of National Labor Relations Board Decisions and Related Court Decisions ,2009 Collective
