Abstract: Mixed methods research (the combined use of quantitative and qualitative methods in the same study) is becoming an increasingly popular approach in the discipline fields of sociology, psychology, education and health sciences. Calls for the integration of quantitative and qualitative research methods have been advanced in these fields. A key feature of mixed methods research is its methodological pluralism, which frequently results in research which provides broader perspectives than those offered by monomethod designs. The overall purpose and central premise of mixed methods is that the use of quantitative and qualitative approaches in combination provides a better understanding of research problems and complex phenomena than either approach alone. Despite calls for the combined use of quantitative and qualitative research in business and management studies, the use of mixed methods in business and management has seldom been studied. The purpose of this paper is to review the application of mixed methods research within organisational research. The study reported in this paper identifies the use of mixed methods in three organisational journals for the period 2003 to 2009: the Strategic Management Journal, Journal of Organizational Behavior and Organizational Research Methods. The landmark Tashakkori and Teddlie (2003) Handbook of mixed methods in social and behavioral research, played a pivotal role in providing both the visibility and credibility of mixed methods as a third methodological movement and since the publication of this seminal work the mixed methods movement has rapidly gained popularity. Business and management researchers need to be made aware of the growing use and acceptance of mixed methods research across business and organisational journals. This paper examines the main characteristics of mixed methods studies identified in the sample in terms of purposes and designs, and posits suggestions on the application of mixed methodologies.

Keywords: mixed methods research, strategic management, organizational behaviour, quantitative methods, qualitative methods

1. Introduction

Mixed methods research (the combined use of quantitative and qualitative methods in the same study) is becoming an increasingly popular approach in the discipline fields of sociology, psychology, education and health sciences. Calls for the integration of quantitative and qualitative research methods have been advanced in these fields (Greene, Caracelli and Graham, 1989; O'Cathain, 2009; Tashakkori and Teddlie 2003). The overall purpose and central premise of mixed methods is that the use of quantitative and qualitative approaches in combination may provide a better understanding of research problems and complex phenomena than either approach alone (Creswell and Plano Clark, 2007).

Despite calls for the combined use of quantitative and qualitative research in management and organisational studies (Curral and Towler, 2003), the use of mixed methods in business and management has seldom been studied. The present study focuses on two main areas that represent micro and macro management research domains: organizational behavior and organizational strategy. These areas are the two largest divisions within the Academy of Management. Regarding research methods, scholars in both fields employ qualitative and quantitative methods, but the use of quantitative approaches dominate both strategy (Phelan, Ferreira and Salvador, 2002) and organizational behavior (Greenberg, 2007). Calls for methodological diversity and the use and integration of quantitative and qualitative research methods have been carried out in organizational behavior (Greenberg, 2007) and in strategy (Boyd, Gove and Hitt, 2005). Moreover, mixed methods research may play an important role not only in encouraging the use of a diversity of methods in these fields but also in bridging the micro and macro domains.

The purpose of this paper is to review the application of mixed methods research within organisational and management research. The study reported in this paper identifies the use of mixed methods in the leading journals in these two organisational fields: the Strategic Management Journal (SMJ) and the Journal of Organizational Behavior (JOB). In addition, Organizational Research Methods (ORM) is
