

Sensation and Perception

Everything that organisms know about the world is first encountered when stimuli in the environment activate sensory organs, initiating awareness of the external world. Perception involves the interpretation of the sensory inputs as a cognitive process.

- Sensation: the detection of external stimuli via the five senses, and the transmission of this information to the brain.
 - Bottom-up processing: sensory receptors register information about the external environment and send it up to the brain for interpretation.
- Perception is the process of organizing and interpreting sensory information so that it makes sense.
 - Top-down processing: information processing guided by higher-level mental processes; constructs perceptions based on experience and expectations.
- Transduction: conversion of one form of energy into another that the brain can use.
 - Sensory receptors in the eyes, ears, nose, tongue, and skin detect sensory information.
 - That sensory information is transformed into neural impulses.
 - The neural impulses are sent to the brain for processing.
- Absolute Threshold: the minimum stimulation needed to detect a particular stimulus 50 percent of the time.
 - Example: to test your absolute threshold for sound, a hearing specialist would expose each of your ears to varying sound levels. For each tone, the test would define where half the time you could detect the sound and half the time you could not. That 50-50 point would define your absolute threshold.
- Signal detection theory: a theory predicting how and when we detect the presence of a faint stimulus (signal) amid background distractions. Assumes there is no single absolute threshold and that detection depends partly on a person's experience, expectations, motivation, and alertness.
 - Signal detection theorists seek to understand why people respond differently to the same stimuli, and why the same person's reactions vary as circumstances change.
 - Exhausted parents will notice the faintest whimper from a newborn's cradle while failing to notice louder, unimportant sounds.
- Subliminal: below one's absolute threshold for conscious awareness.
 - Under certain conditions you can be affected by stimuli so weak that you don't consciously notice them.
 - Priming: when the exposure to one stimulus influences the response to another stimulus.
 - Priming thirsty people with the subliminal word "thirst" can, for a moment, make a thirst-quenching beverage ad more persuasive, but "subliminal messaging" does not have a powerful, enduring effect on behavior.
- Difference threshold (just noticeable difference): the minimum difference a person can detect between any two stimuli 50 percent of the time.
 - The difference threshold increases with the size of the stimulus.
