Knowledge as a Feeling Troy A. Swanson, 2023-05-08 Much of information science theory assumes a type of rationality in how individuals process the world around them but the impact of misinformation and disinformation along with the polarization of society into competing information factions calls for new understandings around our relationships to information Advances in neuroscience and psychology shed new light on how the brain processes information using both conscious and unconscious systems Current theory in neuroscience emphasizes that the mind is not a unified whole but a network of networks constructing reality to anticipate needs Knowledge is not a rational process but centers around the feeling of knowing which is the net output of competing brain processes The feeling of knowing assumes a group context and offers a social epistemological stance that judges knowledge within this group context With knowledge built into groups power dynamics allow work to be accomplished but also privilege some group members over others The feeling of knowing has significant implications for information science challenging theoreticians and practitioners to reconsider how individuals process information For information behavior the feeling of knowing offers a fuller picture looking at conscious and unconscious processing in the production of knowledge For information literacy the feeling of knowing sheds light on how individuals evaluate information and synthesize new sources into their existing knowledge Ultimately the feeling of knowing leads us toward new reflective and metacognitive tools that help meet this moment in the evolution of our information ecosystem This book explores the idea that knowing is a feeling that results from the interactions of the brain's unconscious and conscious processes and not through the accumulation of facts It's intended to help librarians educators and information scientists better understand what neuroscience and psychology are teaching about what it means to know and how our brain learns

Information Behavior Amanda Spink, 2010-06-25 Information behavior has emerged as an important aspect of human life however our knowledge and understanding of it is incomplete and underdeveloped scientifically Research on the topic is largely contemporary in focus and has generally not incorporated results from other disciplines In this monograph Spink provides a new understanding of information behavior by incorporating related findings theories and models from social sciences psychology and cognition In her presentation she argues that information behavior is an important instinctive sociocognitive ability that can only be fully understood with a highly interdisciplinary approach The leitmotifs of her examination are three important research questions First what is the evolutionary biological and developmental nature of information behavior Second what is the role of instinct versus environment in shaping information behavior And third how have information behavior capabilities evolved and developed over time Written for researchers in information science as well as social and cognitive sciences Spink s controversial text lays the foundation for a new interdisciplinary theoretical perspective on information behavior that will not only provide a more holistic framework for this field but will also impact those sciences and thus also open up many new research directions
