Multimodal Signal Processing Human Interactions In Meetings:

Multimodal Signal Processing, 2012 This book is an introduction to multimodal signal processing In it we use the goal of building applications that can understand meetings as a way to focus and motivate the processing we describe Multimodal signal processing takes the outputs of capture devices running at the same time primarily cameras and microphones but also electronic whiteboards and pens and automatically analyses them to make sense of what is happening in the space being recorded For instance these analyses might indicate who spoke what was said whether there was an active discussion and who was dominant in it These analyses require the capture of multimodal data using a range of signals followed by a low level automatic annotation of them gradually layering up annotation until information that relates to user requirements is extracted

Multimodal Signal Processing Steve Renals, 2012-06-07 A comprehensive synthesis of recent advances in multimodal signal processing applications for human interaction analysis and meeting support technology With directly applicable methods and metrics along with benchmark results this guide is ideal for those interested in multimodal signal processing its component disciplines and its application to human interaction analysis Multimodal Interactive Systems Management
