Native American Womens Writing An Anthology C 1800 1924:

Native American Women's Writing Karen L. Kilcup, 1991-01-16 This ground breaking anthology establishes the tradition of early Native American women's writing within American literature and American women's history. With a regionally diverse group of writers, this richly interwoven collection explores in depth the work of well known figures such as Pauline Johnson, Sarah Winnemucca, and Zitkala-Ša, as well as less familiar writers such as Narcissa Owen, Buffalo Bird Woman, Mary Jemison, Ora Eddleman, Reed Sophia, Alice Callahan, Owl Woman, and Annette Leavitt. Anonymously authored women's texts are also included along with writing by children and young adults. Karen Kilcup challenges traditional mainstream notions of what constitutes literature, including political, historical, and autobiographical writing, alongside more familiarly aesthetic forms like romantic poetry, short fiction, and spiritual literature. As well as representing traditional oral narratives, the collection invites readers to hear the translation of orality into written forms. Brief headnotes outline the writers' lives and indicate connections between and among the writers. The volume also includes brief bibliographies of primary and secondary materials for each writer. A key text for the classroom, Native American Women's Writing: An Anthology c 1800-1924 offers an inviting wealth of newly discovered material for scholars and general readers alike.

Writing Indian Nations Maureen Konkole, 2005-11-16 In the early years of the republic, the United States government negotiated with Indian nations because it could not afford protracted wars, politically, militarily, or economically. Maureen Konkole argues that by depending on treaties, which rest on the equal standing of all signatories, Europeans in North America institutionalized a paradox: the very documents through which they sought to dispossess Native peoples in fact conceded Native autonomy. As the United States used coerced treaties to remove Native peoples from their lands, a group of Cherokee, Pequot, Ojibwe, Tuscarora, and Seneca writers spoke out. With history, polemic, and personal narrative, these writers countered widespread misrepresentations about Native peoples' supposedly primitive nature, their inherent inability to form governments, and their impending disappearance. Furthermore, they contended that arguments about racial difference merely justified oppression and dispossession, deriding these arguments as willful attempts to evade the true meanings and implications of the treaties. The writers insisted on recognition of Native peoples' political autonomy and human equality. Konkole demonstrates that these struggles over the meaning of U.S. Native treaties in the early nineteenth century led to the emergence of the first substantial body of Native writing in English, and as she shows, the effects of the struggle over the political status of Native peoples remain embedded in contemporary scholarship.

The Routledge Companion to Native American Literature Deborah L. Madsen, 2015-10-05 The Routledge Companion to Native American Literature engages the multiple scenes of tension—historical, political, cultural, and aesthetic—that constitute a problematic legacy in terms of community, identity, ethnicity, gender, and sexuality, language, and sovereignty in the study of Native American literature. Fictions of Western American Domesticity Amanda J. Zink, 2018-06-01 This work provides a compelling explanation of something that has bedeviled a number of feminist scholars Why did popular authors like Edna Ferber continue to write conventional fiction while living lives that were far from conventional Amanda J Zink argues that white writers like Ferber and Willa Cather avoided the subject of their own domestic labor by writing about the performance of domestic labor by others showing that American print culture both in novels and through advertisements moved away from portraying women as angels in the house and instead sought to persuade other women to be angels in their houses Zink further explores lesser known works such as Mexican American cookbooks and essays in Indian boarding school magazines to show how women writers dialoging domesticity exemplify the cross cultural encounters between colonial domesticity and sovereign domesticity By situating these interpretations of literature within their historical contexts Zink shows how these writers championed and challenged the ideology of domesticity
